This video discusses a book created to celebrate the 40th anniversary of "l'armée Canada," an organization focused on the development of educational assessment methodologies. The author reflects on their past experiences as a guest speaker at the organization in 2018 and provides an overview of the history of learning assessment in Quebec.

This video emphasizes the evolution of educational evaluation from a competitive model to a more formative approach aimed at helping all students succeed. It discusses the importance of formative assessment in classrooms, where students are encouraged to be involved in their evaluation process. The book targets educators and individuals in training, aiming to help them understand historical contexts and how these insights can facilitate improvements in learning assessments.

The author highlights the contemporary challenges in education, such as globalization and the integration of technology like artificial intelligence, and questions how these factors will impact assessments for diverse student populations. The goal is to develop future assessment methods that support all learners effectively, enabling progress for students, teachers, and parents alike.
